

Immune Health

Our client, a leading multinational, was interested in defining, at a fundamental level, the current scientific understanding of the mechanisms behind immunity and the interventions known to influence them.

We developed a framework setting out mechanisms of immunity, which was used to review the recent research on immunity. Insights from interviews conducted with world-leading experts were used to shape a longer-term view.

We made recommendations on both long-term research programs and short-term exploitation of their current product portfolio in the context of supporting immune health.
